PETITION FOR A WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE THIRD CIRCUIT.

To the Honorable, The Chief Justice and Associate Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States:

Petitioners, Estate of Thalia E. Graff Smith, Deceased, Sylvester C. Smith, Jr., Executor, and Sylvester C. Smith, Jr.; and, Mark G. Anton and Adele B. Anton, pray, through their counsel, Samuel J. Foosaner, that a Writ of Certiorari issue to review the judgment of the United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit, entered in the above entitled action, in its decision dated June 30, 1961.

Opinion Below.

This consolidated proceeding was tried in the Tax Court of the United States before the Honorable Judge J. Gregory Bruce, upon a full Stipulation of Facts. The opinion of the Honorable Judge J. Edgar Murdock is reported at 34 T. C. No. 86. The Petitioners appealed to the United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit. The judgment of the Third Circuit, affirming the decision of the Tax Court was rendered and entered on June 30, 1961.

Jurisdiction.

The decision of the United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit was entered on June 30, 1961. Jurisdiction of this Court is invoked under 28 U. S. C. A. 1254(1).

Question Presented.

Whether dividends payable to stockholders of record on a fixed date are chargeable to them, or to the owners of the stock on the declaration date, who, prior to the record date, had divested themselves of complete ownership of the stock?

Statement of the Case.

On April 17, 1953, the directors of a personal holding company, declared a deficiency dividend to be paid on May 10, 1953, to the stockbrokers of record, as of that date. On May 9, 1953, one day prior to the record date, the principal stockholders made gifts of a portion of their said stock to their children. The subsequent May 10th distribution of dividends on the shares so given to the children was reported by the children-donees in their respective incomes for tax purposes. The Commissioner determined that the payments received by the children were chargeable as income to the Petitioners, the donors of the stock.

The Court's decision was based upon the conclusion that the declaration of the dividend created a debtor-creditor relationship between the corporation and its then stockholders, and that the donor-stockholders had a vested right in the dividends as of the date of its declaration. In affirming the decision of the Tax Court, the United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit agreed that upon the dividend being declared, the petitioner-donors acquired a vested right to the payment of a specified sum as of the record date.

Reasons for Granting the Writ.

1. The decision below conflicts with applicable decisions of this Honorable Court, and with decisions of other Circuit Courts of Appeal.

2. The Court below decided an important question of federal law which has not been, but should be settled by the Supreme Court.

3. A uniform application of the law is required in the taxation of property rights. It is, therefore, essential that a controlling decision now be rendered to completely dissipate the utter confusion which will otherwise prevail.

4. The decision of the Court below is erroneous.

Conflict in Controlling Law and Circuit Court Decisions.

This Honorable Court has clearly held, in the case of Estate of Putnam v. Commissioner, 324 U. S. 393 (1945), that a stockholder does not have the right to receive payment of a dividend upon its declaration where a future record date is fixed. This is so, because the corporate resolution, a purely voluntary act of the corporate board of directors, which provides for the payment as of a certain date, not only determines the earliest time for possible receipt, but also who the distributees are. Treasury Regulations 118, Section 39.115(a)-1(d).

The Court below, in holding that the Petitioner-Stockholders as of the declaration date were vested with a right to the dividend is in direct conflict with the Supreme Court decisions in the Putnam case and Avery v. Commissioner, 292 U. S. 210 (1933).

Further conflict now exists between the decision below and the conclusion of Commissioner v. American Light & Traction Co., 156 F. 2d 398 (1946), in the Seventh Circuit; Tar Products v. Commissioner, 130 F. 2d 866 (C. C. A. 3rd 1942). This conflict is further complicated by the decision below and those in other circuits as to whether state or federal law is dispositive of the issue. Helvering v. McGlue's Estate, 119 F. 2d 167 (C. C. A. 4th 1941); Commissioner v. Cohen, 121 F. 2d 348 (C. C. A. 5th 1941).

The Court below ruled that the taxable recipient is to be determined under state law, and that such law is controlling. The taxation of corporate profits and dividends is a matter of federal law, not state law, and must be uniformly applied unless Congress has shown an intention to permit the taxation of dividends to be varied by state law. The incidence of dividend taxation being a federal responsibility, the Court below improperly rested its decision on state law. The fact that stockholders as a class may, for certain corporate purposes, be treated as creditors of the corporation after the declaration of a dividend, should not be determinative in a tax case where the relationship of the parties are examined for quite different purposes. The myriad creditor relationships and rights existing in each state does not determine the federal responsibilities of corporate and individual taxation. It would be intolerable to find that dividends are taxable differently from state to state.

Conflict in Application of Federal and State Law.

Alternatively, were state law to control, the Court below improperly applied this law in arriving at its decision. The Circuit Court, in support of its position, stated that once a corporate dividend is declared, a debtor-creditor relationship arises between it and its then stockholders, under New Jersey law, and the right to the earnings of the corporation becomes vested in the stockholders as of that date, notwithstanding the fixing of a future record date. The Court cited Martindell v. Fiduciary, Inc., 133 N. J. Eq. 408, 30 A. 2d 281 (1943); Beattie v. Gedney, 99 N. J. Eq. 207, 132 Atl. 652 (1926); In re: Heller's Estate, 14 N. J. Super. 152, 81 A. 2d 418 (1951). But it is humbly observed that ea h of the cases so cited deals with the mere declaration of dividends. In none of them is a record date fixed for the dividend payment.

Since the declaration of a dividend constitutes a voluntary act on the part of the board of directors, it legally follows that such board may also fix the date upon which its obligation to its shareholders shall come into being. This is to be clearly drawn from the corporation law of the State of New Jersey. New Jersey Statutes Annotated, Section 14:8-20.

Where a record date is fixed, no identifiable debtor-creditor relationship can arise, prior to such date. (Italics supplied). It is a fixed rule of federal taxation that earnings and profits of a corporation do not become the property of the stockholders-owners, until the board of directors, by proper resolution, determines the date on which such earnings or profits, and the amount thereof, are payable. Putnam, supra. This constitutes an important question involving federal law which requires resolution of this Court.

The lower Court, having erroneously found, in the instant case, that a debtor-creditor relationship was created between it and the Petitioner-donors upon the mere declaration of a dividend, notwithstanding the corporate resolution fixing a specified record date for payment, held that the case of Helvering v. Horst, 311 U. S. 112 (1940), was controlling. But does such finding logically follow? In that case, this Honorable Court held that a donor of interest coupons was taxable on the interest because he retained ownership of the bonds which produced the interest. He kept the tree, disposing only of its fruit. Moreover, the interest had already been earned on the date the coupons were transferred. Admittedly, the thrust of the Horst case would apply even if the bonds had also been transferred, since the interest had already been earned. But the decision in the Horst case does not justify holding the Petitioner-stockholders taxable herein. In the instant case, the Petitioners not only gave the stock itself, but at the date of transfer, no dividends had accrued.

It is respectfully urged that each parent did not transfer any right to a dividend to his child. He transferred shares of stock to which a right had not accrued, either under state or federal law. Herein lies a most vital distinction.

Conflict with Supreme Court Decisions.

The decision below conflicts with the well-established principles of income taxation laid down by this Honorable Court in the case of Blair v. Commissioner, 300 U. S. 5 (1937). That decision holds that income can only be taxable to the owner of property. The owners of the stock as of the date when the dividends were due and payable in the instant case, were the donee-children and not the donor-petitioners. Under the New Jersey law, to which federal tax consequences attach, the board of directors of a corporation only is empowered to declare dividends, and it is for it to simultaneously determine the stockholder of what record date shall be entitled to such dividends. New Jersey Statutes Annotated, Section 14:8-20. To tax Petitioners on income to which they had no right contravenes the basic principles of taxation.

The decisions below seek to confine and limit the application of the holdings of this Honorable Court in the Putnam case and U. S. v. Anderson, 269 U. S. 422 (1926). Such limitation is not warranted. The Court, in the Putnam case, stated on page 399 that:

> "Under the income tax acts, no stockholder has a separate and divisible taxable interest in the assets of a corporation, even though those assets have been increased by earnings. Earnings, before declaration of dividends, while increasing the value of his stock, have never been treated as an event to mark taxable income to the stockholder. Mere declaration of a dividend does not alter the stockholder's interest in the corporate assets. The stockholder can acquire no interest in the dividend, amounting to an accrual under section 42 (Revenue Act of 1938) before the amount of the dividend and the distributee is determined." (Italics supplied.)

The Court below concluded that this Honorable Court reached this decision as a matter of "practical considerations of fairness and convenience", in the case of an accrual basis taxpayer. It is respectfully suggested that such conclusion is not warranted.

Uniformity Required.

Uniformity in the corporate and financial world in the treatment of dividends necessitates a controlling decision by the Supreme Court. The rules as to stock sold are correctly stated in Treasury Regulations 118, Section 39.22(a)-1(d), which provides, in part as follows:

> "The fact that a dividend is declared shortly after the sale of corporate stock and the sale price is influenced by the expectation of the payment of a dividend, does not make such dividend when paid taxable to the vendor as a dividend. The amount advanced by the vendee to the vendor in contemplation of the next dividend payment is an investment of capital and may not be claimed as a deduction from gross income. * * *"

The current Treasury Regulations, at Section 1.61-9 (c), likewise provide:

"When stock is sold, and a dividend is both declared and paid after the sale, such dividend is not gross income to the seller. When stock is sold after the declaration of a dividend and after the date as of which the seller becomes entitled to the dividend, the dividend ordinarily is income to the seller. When stock is sold between the time of payment of the dividend, and the sale takes place at such time that the purchaser becomes entitled to the dividend, the dividend ordinarily is income to him. * * *" (Italics supplied).

The Commissioner, in his rulings, and the Tax Court, in its decisions, have held that the entire amount of a dividend, upon becoming due and payable as of the record date, is income to the new owner. Revenue Ruling 56-211, 1956—1 CB 155. Your Federal Income Tax (1953), publication of Bureau of Internal Revenue; Julius S. Rippel, et al. v. Commissioner, 13 B. T. A. 438 (1928); Marcus Frieder v. Commissioner, 27 B. T. A. 1239 (1933). The very source of the dividend, corporate surplus, is not diminished until the record date. How can this tax consequence be reconciled with the Court below's view that the stockholder receives a vested right to corporate surplus immediately upon the declaration of a dividend? The Court below, in commenting upon these settled areas of taxation, stated that none of the considerations and complexities involved in such cases were present here, adding further that its holding neither controls nor is controlled by rulings whether sales have yielded capital gains or ordinary income. Federal tax consequences should apply alike to all stock transfers, whether they be sales or gifts, and to all corporate-dividend transactions. Uniformity and certainty regarding the federal tax consequences of dividends between the stockholders on the declaration date and the stockholders on the record date is required by a decision of this Honorable Court.

Conclusion.

A matter of substantial importance governed by federal law is presented herewith; and for the reasons hereinabove stated, it is respectfully requested that this Petition for a Writ of Certiorari be granted.

Respectfully submitted,

MOTION GRANTED
KALODNER,
J.

Opinion of the Court.

(Filed June 30, 1961.)

Argued April 7, 1961

Before:

GOODRICH, McLAUGHLIN and HASTIE, Circuit Judges.

By: HASTIE, Circuit Judge.

On April 17, 1953, the directors of a personal holding company, a New Jersey corporation, declared a dividend to be paid on May 10, 1953, to the stockholders then of record. On May 9, 1953, the principal stockholders gave certain shares of their stock to their several children. Thereafter, the May 10th distribution of dividends on those shares was made to the children, who reported the amounts thus received as their income. However, in the present proceeding the Commissioner has assessed deficiencies against the parents, treating the dividend payments to the children as realization of income by the parents. The Tax Court sustained this position and the parents have appealed.

At the outset, it seems clear that whenever a lawful dividend on particular stock is fully declared each stockholder becomes a creditor of the corporation with a vested right to be paid a specified sum at some future time. Since this is a matter of defining the intra-corporate property rights created by the declaration of a dividend by a New Jersey corporation, New Jersey law is controlling. Federal law merely attaches tax consequences to the rights thus created. A number of New Jersey cases recognize and apply the above stated rule as to the effect of a declaration of a dividend. Martindell v. Fiduciary Counsel, Inc., 1943, 133 N. J. Eq. 408, 30 A. 2d 281; Beattie v. Gedney, 1926, 99 N. J. Eq. 207, 132 Atl. 652; In re Heller's Estate, 1951, 14 N. J. Super. 152, 81 A. 2d 418. Appellant urges that this rule is inapplicable if in declaring the dividend the directors of the corporation fix a particular future date for the determination of the payees. But we find nothing in the New Jersey cases or in sound reason to warrant such a limitation. We are satisfied that, as a stockholder at the time a dividend was lawfully declared, each parent acquired a vested right to the payment of a specified sum on May 10, and that he transferred this right to his child the day before the May 10th record date.

Certainly these dividends which were both declared and distributed in 1953 were ordinary income taxable in that year either to the parents or the children, depending upon whether in legal contemplation the donor or the donee realized the income. On this question whether parent or child realized income, we think Helvering v. Horst, 1940, 311 U. S. 112, is controlling. In that case a father owned negotiable bonds. He detached negotiable interest coupons from the bonds shortly before the due date of the coupons and gave the coupons to his son. In determining whether father or son realized income the Supreme Court reasoned as follows:

> "Although the donor here, by the transfer of the coupons, has precluded any possibility of his collecting them himself, he has nevertheless, by his act, procured payment of the interest as a valuable gift to a member of his family. Such a use of his economic gain, the right to receive income, to procure a satisfaction which can be obtained only by the expenditure of money or property, would seem to be the enjoyment of the income whether the satisfaction is the purchase of goods at the corner grocery, the payment of his debt there, or such non-material satisfactions as may result from the payment of a campaign or community chest contribution, or a gift to his favorite son. Even though he never receives > the money, he derives money's worth from the disposition of the coupons which he has used as money or money's worth in the procuring of a satisfaction which is procurable only by the expenditure of money or money's worth. The enjoyment of the economic benefit accruing to him by virtue of his acquisition of the coupons is realized as completely as it would have been if he had collected the interest in dollars and expended them for any of the purposes named." 311 U. S. at 117.

In exactly the same way each parent here realized the economic benefit he wished to derive from his dividend rights through his gift, followed almost immediately by the corporation's payment to his child. Such dealing by a parent with his vested right to a lawfully declared dividend, is not significantly different from the gift of negotiable interest coupons in the Horst case.

Seeking to avoid the impact of the Horst decision the petitioners point out that there the interest coupons alone were given away. But in both cases the right to the earnings in question was a vested right to receive a determined amount of fully earned gain. Such a right is distinct from the stock ownership, though derived from it. In the horticultural metaphor which has become familiar in cases of this type, "the fruit had ripened" before the gift. In these circumstances, we see no reason why the rule of the Horst case should not be as fully applicable to a gift of the fruit with the tree as to a gift of the fruit alone. This was recognized by the Tax Court in Estate of Bertha May Holmes, 1943, 1, T. C. 508. We quote, with entire approval, that court's reasoning as to the reach of the Horst doctrine:

> "It is true that in the Horst case, Horst remained the owner of the bonds from which the coupons were detached until after the maturity date of the coupons, > whereas in the instant case the decedent gave to her son and daughter not only the credited accumulated dividends, but the shares of stock as well. However, it would be difficult to see why, if the gift by the owner of accrued interest represented by negotiable coupons not yet due, which he detached from bonds of which he remained the owner and which were collected by the donee in the same taxable year, represented a realization by the donor of the accrued interest, yet the gift of dividends which had already been credited on stock did not represent realization of income by the owner merely because at the same time that she made the gift of the dividends she also gave away the stock * * * The only importance which attaches to the fact that Horst remained the owner of the bond was as to interest which accrued after the date of the gift. In other words, as we construe the meaning of the Supreme Court's opinion in the Horst case, it is this: that all the fruit of the tree that had grown on the tree at the time of the gift and was plucked by the donee in the same year as the gift was as effectively gathered by the owner of the tree as if he had plucked the fruit himself." 1 T. C. at 511, 512.

We have also considered petitioner's reliance on Estate of Putnam v. Commissioner, 1945, 324 U. S. 393. There a stockholder who was a cash-basis taxpayer died after a dividend had been declared but before the record date. The question presented was whether this gain was taxable income of the final period of the testator himself or was properly includable in the first return of his estate. A difference between tax brackets made the assignment of this item important. The Supreme Court concluded that this dividend income was allocable to the period after the testator's death and, therefore, should be reported as income of his estate. Practical considerations of fairness and convenience may dictate that this rule as to the time of reporting dividend income should apply even to accrual basis taxpayers. Commissioner v. American Light & Traction Co., 7th Cir. 1946, 156 F. 2d 398; cf. Tar Products Corp. v. Commissioner, 3d Cir. 1942, 130 F. 2d 866. But for present purposes such decisions indicate merely that, even if the parents here had themselves retained the stock and received the dividends they would properly have accounted for this income in the year of distribution rather than the year of declaration, assuming the two had been different. But such determination of the proper time of accounting does not help us solve the present problem, whether the donor or donee of the right to the dividend is the person legally required to pay the tax upon it.

Finally, the petitioners seek to find some analogy in cases presenting those difficult problems of choice between capital gains and ordinary income treatment which often arise when part of the gain realized on a sale of securities represents the value of accrued interest, original issue discount, or declared, accumulated or expected dividends. But we have here none of the considerations and complexities involved in such sale cases. This is merely a case where an intra-family gift has occurred in connection with transactions which clearly yielded some member of the family ordinary income. Which member is determined by deciding who should be viewed as realizing the taxable gain. Our holding in this case neither controls nor is controlled by rulings whether sales have yielded capital gains or ordinary income.

The decision of the Tax Court will be affirmed.
